THE LANT ROME.
BY ASPIRANT.

We can not regret the demise of the rose in question, since dying she bequeathed the odor of her pure soul to the sweet "Aspirant." The last two lines of this touching little poem stir a sleeping echo in our own heart, which is still ringing in wistful pathos and down its corridors.—En.

The roses have had their way,
I saw the last one to-day, And I thought, in my lonely heart, 'Twas a very odd thing to part With the pride of all Nature's array, Of beautiful flowers both grave and gay.
I stooped and kissed the too delicate flower, With a sigh and a tear, that 'twas not in my power
To keep it longer, when it would away,
And I could only beseeching say, Come back again in early spring,
And look at others with you bring.
Oh! that we could thus recall The human flower, that daily fall, Back to our poor aching hearts, So pierced by sorrow's darts,
And know they'd hear our call,
And return with the roses one and all.
Then would the smile to our lips return, Light and warmth to the eye so stern, Joy too, would in our footsteps ring,
And love fill our hearts for every thing;
The sun would shine in every sky Forever, if they'd come back, who die;

CHAPTER XVII. THE FIRST SUCKER.

On the following evening, as we have said, Rosa returned with the Billie of Cornelius De Witte.
Then began between the master and the pupil one of those charming scenes, which are the delight of the novelist who has to describe them.

The grated window, the only opening through which the two lovers were able to communicate, was too high for conveniently reading a book, although it had been quite convenient for them to read each other's faces.

Rosa, therefore had to press the open book against the grating edgeways, holding it aloft, in her right hand the lamp, but Cornelius hit upon the lucky idea of fixing it to the bars, so as to afford her a little rest. Rosa was then enabled to follow with her finger the letters and syllables, which she was to spell for Cornelius, who with a straw pointed out the letters to his attentive pupil, through the holes of the grating.

The light of the lamp illuminated the rich complexion of Rosa, her blue liquid eyes, and her golden hair under the headdress of gold brocade; with her finger held up, and showing in the blood, as it flowed downwards in the veins, that pale pink hue which shines before the light, out to the living transparency of the flesh tint.

Rosa's intellect rapidly developed itself under the animating influence of Cornelius, and when the difficulties seemed too arduous, the sympathy of two loving hearts seemed to smooth them away.

And Rosa, after having returned to her room, repeated in her solitude the reading lessons, but, at the same time, recalled all the delight which she had felt whilst receiving them.

One evening she came half an hour later than usual. This was too extraordinary an instance not to call forth, at once, Cornelius' inquiries after its cause.
"Oh! it is not my fault," she said.
"My father has renewed an acquaintance with an old crazy who used to visit him at the Hague, and to ask him to let him see the prison.
He is a good sort of fellow, fond of his bottle, tells funny stories, and, moreover is very free with his money, so as always to be ready to stand a treat."

"You don't know anything further of him?" asked Cornelius, surprised.
"No," she answered, "it is only for about a fortnight that my father has taken such a fancy to this friend who is so assiduous in visiting him."

"Ah, so," said Cornelius, shaking his head uneasily, as every new incident seemed to him to forebode some catastrophe, "very like some spy, one of those who are sent into jails to watch both prisoners and keepers."

"I don't believe that," said Rosa, smiling, "if that worthy person is spying after any one, it is certainly not my father."

"After whom, then?"
"Me, for instance."

"Why not?" said Rosa, smiling.
"Ah, that's true," Cornelius observed with a sigh. "You will not always have suitors in vain, this man may become your husband."

"I don't say anything to the contrary."
"What cause have you to entertain such a happy prospect?"

"Rather say this fear, Mynheer Cornelius."

"Thank you, Rosa, you are right; well, I will say, then, this fear?"
"I have only this reason—"
"Tell me, I am anxious to hear."
"This man, came several times before to the Buitenhof, at the Hague. I remember now, it was just about the time when you were confined there. When I left, he left too, when I came here, he came after me. At the Hague his pretext was that he wanted to see you."

"See me?"
"Yes, it must have undoubtedly been only a pretext; for now, when he could plead the same reason, as you are my father's prisoner again, he does not care any longer for you; quite the contrary, I heard him say to my father only yesterday that he did not know you."

"Go on, Rosa, pray do, that I may guess who that man is, and what he wants."

"Are you quite sure, Mynheer Cornelius, that none of your friends can interest himself for you?"

"I have no friends, Rosa, I have only my old nurse, whom you know, and who knows you. Alas! poor Sue, she would come herself and see me roundabout ways. She would at once say to your father or to you, 'My good sir, or my good miss, my child is here, see how grieved I am, let me see him for one hour and I'll pray for you as long as I live.' No, no," continued Cornelius, "With the exception of my poor old Sue, I have no friends in this world."

"Then I come back to what I thought before, and the more so at last evening at sunset, whilst I was arranging the border where I am to plant your bulb, I saw a shadow gliding between the elder trees and the aspens. I did not appear to see him, but it was this man. He concealed himself and saw me digging the ground, and certainly it was me, whom he followed, and me, whom he was spying after. I could not move my rake, or touch one atom of soil, without his noticing it."

"Oh! yes, yes, he is in love with you," said Cornelius. "Is he young? Is he handsome?"

Saying this he looked anxiously at Rosa, eagerly waiting for her answer.

"Young? handsome?" cried Rosa, bursting into a laugh. "He is hideous to look at; crooked, nearly fifty years of age, and never dares to look me in the face or to speak, except in an under tone."

"And his name?"
"Jacob Giesek."

"I don't know him."
"Then you see that, at all events, he does not come after you."

"At any rate, if he loves you, Rosa, which is very likely, as to see you is to love you, at least you don't love him."

"To be sure, I don't."
"Then you wish me to keep my mind easy?"

"I should certainly ask you to do so."
"Well, then, now as you begin to know how to read, you will read all that I write to you of the pangs of jealousy and of absence, won't you, Rosa?"

"I shall read it, if you write with good big letters."

Then as the turn which the conversation took began to make Rosa uneasy, she asked—

"By-the-by, how is your tulip going on?"

"Oh, Rosa, only imagine my joy; this morning I looked at it in the sun, and after having moved the soil aside which covers the bulb, I saw the first sprouting of the leaves. This small green has caused me a much greater emotion than the order of His Highness, which turned aside the sword, already raised, at the Buitenhof."

"You hope, then," said Rosa smiling.
"Yes, yes, I hope."

"And I, in my turn, when shall I plant my bulb?"

"Oh, the first favorable day, I will tell you, but whatever you do, let nobody help you, and don't confide your secret to any one in the world; do you see, a connoisseur, by merely looking at the bulb, would be able to distinguish its value; and so, my dearest Rosa, be careful in locking up the third sucker which remains to you."

"It is still wrapped up in the same paper in which you put it, and just as you gave it me. I have laid it at the bottom of my chest under my point lace, which keeps it dry, without pressing upon it.
But good night, my poor captive gentleman."

"How? already?"
"It must be, it must be."

"Coming so late and going so soon."
"My father might grow impatient not seeing me return, and that precious lover might suspect a rival."

Here she listened uneasily.
"What is it?" asked Van Baerle.
"I thought I heard something."

"What, then?"
"Something like a step, creaking on the staircase."

"Surely," said the prisoner, "that cannot be Master Gryphus, he is always heard at a distance."

"No, it is not my father, I am quite sure, but—"

"But?"
"But it might be Mynheer Jacobs."

Rosa rushed toward the staircase, and a door was really heard rapidly to close before the young dame had got down the first ten steps.

Cornelius was very uneasy about it, but it was, after all, only a prelude to greater anxieties.

The following days passed without any remarkable incident. Gryphus made his three visits, and discovered nothing. He never came at the same hours, as he hoped thus to discover the secrets of the prisoner. Van Baerle, therefore, had devised a contrivance, a sort of pulley, by means of which he was able to lower or to raise his jug below the ledge of tiles and stone before his window. The strings by which this was effected, he had found means to cover with that moss which generally grows on tiles, or in the crannies of the wall.

Gryphus suspected nothing, and the device succeeded for eight days. One morning, however, when Cornelius, absorbed in the contemplation of his bulb, from which a germ of vegetation was already peeping forth, had not heard old Gryphus coming up stairs, as a gale of wind was blowing which shook the whole tower, the door suddenly opened.

Gryphus, perceiving an unknown and consequently a forbidden object in the hands of his prisoner, pounced upon it, with the same rapidity as the hawk on its prey.

As ill luck would have it, his course, hard hand, the same which he had broken, and which Cornelius Van Baerle had set so well, grasped at once in the midst of the jug on the spot where the bulb was lying on the soil.

"What have you got here?" he roared.
"Ah! have I caught you?" and with this he grabbed in the soil.

"I? nothing, nothing," cried Cornelius, trembling.

"Ah! have I caught you? a jug, and earth in it, there is some criminal secret at the bottom of all this."

"Oh, my good master Gryphus," said Van Baerle, imploringly, and anxious, like the partridge robbed of her young by the rasper.

In fact, Gryphus was beginning to dig the soil with his crooked fingers.

"Take care, sir, take care," said Cornelius, growing quite pale.

"Care of what! sounds of what?"
roared the jailer.

"Take care, I say, you will crush it, Master Gryphus!"

And with a rapid and almost frantic movement he snatched the jug from the hands of Gryphus, and hid it like a treasure under his arm.

But Gryphus, obstinate, like an old man, and more and more convinced that he was discovering here a conspiracy against the Prince of Orange, rushed up to his prisoner, raising his stick; seeing, however, the impossible resolution of the captive to protect his flower-pot, he was convinced that Cornelius trembled much less for his head than for his jug.

He, therefore, tried to wrest it from him by force.

"Hulloa!" said the jailer, furious,
"here you see, you are rebelling."

"Leave me my tulip," cried Van Baerle.

"Ah, yes, tulip," replied the old man,
"we know well the shifts of prisoners."

"But I vow to you—"

"Let go," repeated Gryphus, stamping his foot, let go or I shall call the guard."

"Call whoever you like, but you shall not have this flower except with my life."

Gryphus, exasperated, plunged his finger a second time into the soil, and now he drew out the bulb, which certainly looked quite black; and whilst Van Baerle looked happy to have saved the vessel, did not suspect that the adversary had possessed himself of its precious contents.
Gryphus hurried the softened bulb with all his force on the flag, where, almost instantly after, it was crushed to atoms under his heavy shoe.

Van Baerle saw the work of destruction; got a glimpse of the juicy remains of his darling bulb, and, guessing the cause of the ferocious joy of Gryphus, uttered a cry of agony, which would have melted the heart even of that ruthless jailer, who some years before killed Pellissou's epiderm.

The idea of striking down this spiteful bully passed like lightning through the brain of the tulip-fancier. The blood rushed to his brow, and seemed like fire in his eyes, which blinded him; and he raised in his two hands the heavy jug with all the now useless earth which remained in it. One instant more, and he would have flung it on the bald head of old Gryphus.

But a cry stopped him; a cry of agony, uttered by poor Rosa, who, trembling and pale, with her arms raised to heaven, made her appearance behind the grated window, and thus interposed between her father and her friend.

Gryphus then understood the danger with which he had been threatened, and he broke out in a volley of the most terrible abuse.

"Indeed," said Cornelius to him, "you must be a very mean and spiteful fellow, to rob a poor prisoner of his only consolation, a tulip bulb."

"For shame, my father," Rosa chimed in, "it is indeed a crime you have committed here."

"Ah, is that you my little chatterbox?" the old man cried, boiling with rage and turning towards her, "don't you meddle with what don't concern you, but go down as quickly as possible."

"Unfortunate me!" continued Cornelius, overwhelmed with grief.

"After all, it is but a tulip," Gryphus resumed, as he began to be a little ashamed of himself. "You may have as many tulips as you like, I have three husdred of them in my loft."

"To the devil with your tulips!" cried Cornelius; "you are worthy of each other; had I a hundred thousand millions of them, I would gladly give them for the one you have just destroyed!"

"Ah! so," Gryphus said, in a tone of triumph; "now there we have it. It was not your tulip you cared for. There was in that false bulb some witchcraft, perhaps some means of correspondence with conspirators against His Highness who has granted you your life. I always said they were wrong in not cutting your head off."

"Father, father!" cried Rosa.

"Yes, yes! it is better as it is now," repeated Gryphus, growing warm; "I have destroyed it, and I'll do the same again, as often as you repeat the trick. Didn't I tell you my fine fellow, that I would make your life a hard one?"

"A curse on you!" Cornelius exclaimed, quite beyond himself with despair, as he gathered, with his trembling fingers, the remnants of that bulb on which he had rested so many joys and so many hopes.

"We shall plant the other to-morrow, my dear Mynheer Cornelius," said Rosa, in a low voice, who understood the intense grief of the unfortunate tulip-fan-cier, and who, with the pure sacred love of her innocent heart, poured these kind words like a drop of balm, on the bleeding wounds of Cornelius.

AMBITION.

BY H—

I am aware that my theme is an old one, almost worn threadbare by the her-oit effort of aspiring school boys, and sentimental school girls, who have written in the most superlative style of the giddy "heights of fame," and the historic achievements of Napoleon, and the world conquering success of Alexander. It is an old, old story, as familiar as A B C to those who read. The whole list of heroes, by "blood and field," has been sung in verse and embalmed in story, and it is not my intention to add another to the world-be detractors or enthusiastic admirers of that much worn subject, ambition, himself, said: "There is nothing new under the sun," and has not Wendell Phillips, the apostle of freedom and free thought, decanted eloquently on the value and beauty of the "Lost Arts," showing conclusively that all our vaunted progress is nothing more than small improvements on old discoveries. Honor and fame to the undaunted men who have hewn our paths through the trackless wilds of savage countries, who have sailed over stormy and unknown seas, and founded new empires. They have established a claim on the gratitude of the world, and their names will ever be held in reverence and grateful esteem. I want to bespeak tolerance for that ambition which impels one to live a pure, true and noble life. That ambition which helps a man to be himself and not a slave. That ambition, which would take the five talents given, and mold them into ten.
That ambition which virtue practices, goodness lives and God loves. How often are our ambitions unworthy and debasing. How poor and little that feeling which prompts us to outshine our neighbors in silken attire and sumptuous surroundings, which plumes itself on money and money's worth, and flaunts in the face of superior talent and nobler lives, its vulgar shoddy self. Howard, the philanthropist, was ambitious, not for himself, but for suffering humanity. He pursued his course with patient love and heroic endurance, blinding the friendless, feeding the starving, helping the helpless, until he accomplished much good, which as long as time endures will stamp him one of the noblest benefactors of his race. The ambition of Florence Nightingale was of a kindred nature to that of Howard. In fevers and pestilence and noxious disease, she wended her way "scattering charities that soothe and heal and bless at the feet of man like flowers."

How many have lived and died in pursuit of the noblest aims! buoyed up by the grandest ambition that could sustain and strengthen their effort! How many are still living, exerting all their time and strength in the cause and service of humanity. The same heroic, God-like feeling that inspired the time-honored benefactors of mankind is still inspiring, sustaining and propelling the present generation of noble-hearted men. This would be a benighted world without ambition. If all men were content to live and die without great attainments, human nature would soon sink to its lowest debasement. Then cherish that ambition that would make the most of life and its opportunities. Nourish that ambition that would develop good and crush out evil. In short, have an ambition to leave the world better than you found it.

LETTER FROM CROMWELL.

CROMWELL, KY., Nov. 15.

EDITOR HERALD:—News in this part of the moral vineyard is scarce, and not comatable by an one unless he searches closer for that article than your humble correspondent ever did.

Business in our town, our merchants say, is quite good, though, in spite of the strong remonstrances of the farmer's movement as it is popularly called, they have, a large majority of them, much to the regret of the sellers, returned to the credit system. So, from this, the business which is being done is principally on a credit.

There was quite a crowd of people in town on Saturday last, some of whom in the evening doubled Cape Horn, came around the point making like a locomotive, swearing like the army in Flanders, their gait reminded one of that of a puny calf sick with the hind staggers. Their speech was very much like that of other beasts in some of our charitable institutions designated as Lunatic Asylums. These things do not occur here often, but unfortunately for this and every other place where the "critter" is sold, will be more or less. It's a society of men or women could, by moral suasion, or otherwise, rid the land of this our greatest evil would immortalize themselves, and be the greatest benefactors to the race since the Christian era began.

Our townsmen, Mr. T. P. Paxton, has just started his new wheat mill, under the superintendence of that prince of millers, Dan. Wise, where all who may come can get their wheat manufactured into first grade flour promptly, and we think honestly.

Prof. Welborn's school here is progressing finely, with good prospects of being a decided success. The Professor is a young man, and has many of the elements which, by practice, will make him a first class instructor. He is faithful, industrious and sober as a sage; but is short of patience.

The health of our neighborhood and town is about as good as usual, consequently quite as dull with a downward tendency.

Our neighboring cities of Louisville and Evansville seem to be still alive to business, they having sent in the last week something less than forty thousand drummers to this place, all good, jolly, well-fed fellows.

The honest yeomanry of this vicinity are not well pleased with the action of our County Court, since at the very time they thought we would all stand firm under our heavy load of taxes, the court levied ten thousand dollars additional.

This is more than any good farmer can bear, without rebelling some of his original property used to denounce such acts of county extravagance as this expense.

LETTER FROM CANYVILLE.

CANYVILLE, KY., Nov. 15.

EDITOR HERALD:—Hard times, dullness of business, and all sorts of scarcity of personalities will cause our letter to be unusually short this week, notwithstanding we will write anyhow, that your readers may know that neither Cany-ville or ourself have received any serious damages by the vast amount of slating poor Ali Ben Hamad has seen proper to throw at us in the last issue of the HERALD. Yes we pity that poor man, he knows not what to do that people may know such a being is actually in existence Mr. Editor, give him at least a square in your paper, and set up his name in Great Primer or two line English type, that the world may know such a creature is really in existence, among the hills of Grayson county, and the next time he meets you he will congratulate you with his face bearing the expression of pumpkin pie.

Mrs. Lullie Gray, of this place, went to Livermore, her former home Tuesday 9th inst., and returned home last Saturday accompanied by her mother, Mrs.— Hackett, who is now spending a few days at the residence of her son-in-law, W. T.
Gary of this place.

Prof. G. C. Westerfield gave a lecture on penmanship in this town last Saturday night, but owing to the inclemency of the weather the audience was small.

Dr. P. O. Brandon returned his family to Louisville Thursday where he will attend medical lectures this winter.

The first crop of new tobacco was delivered at the warehouse of Porter and Esbridge in this place last week.

J. C. Milligan has posted notices to the effect that he will apply to the county court of Grayson county on the fourth Monday of this month for a license to keep a tavern in this place with the privilege of retailing "Killing Kill all."

Note this "Nominal" perhaps you can make a new bar bill.

LETTER FROM NO. EIGHT.

No. EIGHT, Ohio Co., Ky., Nov. 14.

EDITOR HERALD:—Nothing having occurred around No. 8 worthy of note for some time, I concluded to take a journey and look for an item for the HERALD.

Accordingly, on the 9th I took my way to Hamilton, where the Good Templars met in convention on the 9th and 10th instant, where we were met by the delegates from the different lodges in the county, among whom we recognized many of our friends. Among the many with whom we were pleased to exchange the greetings of friendship, were the Hamiltons of No. 14, Newtons of 410, and our old friend and kinsman, Peter Ashby, of Ceralto, who is one of the veterans of Temperance in Ohio county.

We will not attempt, however, to give a summary of the proceedings, as that has been done doubtless ere this, by her pense than mine, but we will say this, that for kindness and hospitality, the people of Hamilton and vicinity are surpassed by none in the State. We will long remember the kindness of Mr. Joshua Rendler and family with whom we spent the evening and night, or at least that part of it which remained after our visit to Rock of Safety Lodge.

The people were entertained at night by Kentucky's orator and popular temperance lecturer, Geo. W. Bain, who exposed the evils of intemperance in all their hideous color, and compared with them the blessings to be derived from total abstinence. He is a forcible speaker, and one calculated to carry terror into the hearts of his adversaries. We hope he will soon favor No. 8 with a lecture. He is doing a noble work for the cause in our HARTFORD, OHIO COUNTY, KY.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 21, 1875.

Is an article on the "pardoning power," the Carrollton Democrat offers the following suggestion to Governor McCREARY. "Require, whenever you pardon a convict or remit a fine, that the representations of any influential man or men who may be advocating it, together with the petition and the names of the signers, be published in some newspaper of the county where the offense was committed, if there be any, and if not, in the paper published nearest to the scene of the offense; and if the case be a grave one, then have it published also in some paper of general circulation in the State." The Democrat also remarks that if all the representations, made by influential parties to Governor LESLIE during the last year of his term in aid of persons convicted of offenses against the law, were published, it would furnish some very interesting reading.

We think the suggestion a good one, and if Governor McCREARY would adopt such a rule, there would be a falling off of five hundred per cent. in the number of petitions presented, which would save him a great deal of annoyance. If the petitions presented to Governor LESLIE were examined closely, the names of many, if not all of those who have raised such a howl about his too free use of the "pardoning power" would be found among the list of petitioners. Governors are frequently imposed upon.

LETTER FROM AN EGYPTIAN.

MILLWOOD, KY., Nov. 22nd.
FRIEND MEHEMIT:—In my last I promised you a letter on the poets and poetry of the West, but I must beg of you not to expect the fire and imagery displayed in our own passionate Oriental poetry among those cold-blooded dwellers of a Western clime.

Those that make pretensions to the poetic art, appear to consider it a necessary concomitant to nurse a morbid sensibility, that almost invariably destroys the beauty of their productions, and robs them of all the charms they would otherwise possess. There are exceptions, of course, and the merry hearted Saxe sends out his flashes of genuine poetic merriment like gleams of brightest sunshine, while the English Tom Hood looks through the gloom of the "Haunted House" with a smiling face, when he tells of "Nelly Grey" and "Paying Through the Nose."

But the sickly sentimentality seems to be cultivated to a greater extent than any other kind of verse making. Every subject has been worked upon, until, at length, all have become so utterly threadbare as to be scarce worth wasting paper and ink upon. Love—that prompter of the poetic art—has at length succumbed under the manipulation of such wretches as "Romeo Pinkstaff," and the slang of the California miner, in the hands of Bret Harte, has usurped its broad and fertile domains.

Every newspaper that is published overflows with this sentimental fustian, which emanates from the brains of some love-sick idiot, who invariably gives vent to his passion in a sickly attempt to perpetrate verse of the "I'm Lonely Darling" style, which is almost sure to be imposed upon the public through the medium of some shallow brained editor of a newspaper, thus causing the Muse to cover her face with her mantle, and weep tears of deepest shame at the degeneracy of her once beautiful art.

But America had, and yet possesses, poets of the highest order, and the names of her departed Drake, Halleck, Poe, Prentice, and a host of others standing beside her living Bryant, Whittier, Saxe, Longfellow, and others of a high order, forms a galaxy of poetic brightness which any country might well be proud to boast.

It is strange, friend Mehemit, that genius and debauchery, as a general rule, go hand in hand together. This is true of Columbia's brightest genius, poor unfortunate Edgar A. Poe. Possessing poetic talent of a superior order, instead of fostering this gift that Allah had bestowed upon him, he made himself miserable by continued excesses, that very soon ended a life that might have been the pride of his country and himself—the brightest star in the temple of poetic fame for ages yet to come. With an intellect that bade defiance to Christendom for power and greatness, he spurned this gift of the Creator, and lowered himself to a level with the beasts of the field; he debased that heavenly intellect, and lay down to bed with wine, as grovelling and filthy as they. But he has left us some beautiful monuments of his short presence among us, and his "Annabel Lee." I consider the best poetical production of America. The continued debauchery of the man caused his writings to assume a morbid aspect that otherwise would have been foreign to them. Yet are they still beautiful, and some shall live whilst the language they are written in continues to exist. He has gone, and in pity and admiration we cover up his innumerable faults, and gaze with astonishment on the sublimity of a genius which dazzles with its effulgence the eyes of even the strictest moralist, until, in its lofty transcendence, he forgets the failings of the man in the majesty of the human mind.

The love songs of America are, as a general rule, the merest trash and nonsense imaginable. There are exceptions, and among those the songs of the poet Sprague, in my estimation, stands unrivalled for their pathos and fire found in no other American songwriter's productions.

Of national or good patriotic songs, America has very few, and even those are devoid of that merit by which we must judge those kind of productions. The "Star Spangled Banner" is, perhaps the best, but it is completely bereft of that heart fire which endear such songs to the hearts of the natives of those countries to which they belong.

The "Marseilles Hymn of Liberty" has all the fire, energy, patriotism, and, in fact, every requisite that is necessary to such composition. The Frenchman, on the banks of the Mississippi, hears the sound of the grand old "Marseilles" with the same thrill of patriotic ardor he felt when a boy on the banks of his native Seine, as he listened to its soul-stirring familiar sounds; and, in fancy, he is wafted again to the vineyards of his beautiful France, or fights, in imagination, the battles of the famous Napoleon, who had made his country the pride of her sons, the terror of her foes, and the music of the grand old Marseilles immortal.

America has no such, and I would think, friend Mehemit, that those proud sons of liberty should cultivate and encourage those ties that bind the hearts of men to the land of their birth, by offering suitable inducements for the best compositions of this kind that could be written.

I would like to say more on this subject, but my letter is already too long, so I will conclude by hoping your shadow may never grow less.

ALI BEN HAMAD.

been spending the week in attending court.

Fine crops of corn have been raised in this county, especially on the uplands, and is selling at 40 cts per bushel delivered.

We learn that the hogs in this county will be scarce this season than they have been for several seasons past.

From some cause or other we have failed to receive the Owensboro Examiner this week. What is the matter, gentlemen? Is it carelessness on the part of the mail agents on the road, or did you fail to mail us one?

Mr. Z. Wayne Griffin, who has for several days been visiting relatives in Louisville and Elizabethtown, returned home Monday, leaving his family in Elizabethtown, where they will sojourn for a short time.

Yesterday morning we were honored by a call from Mr. Geo. H. Cox, of the Owensboro Monitor. Mr. Cox arrived in this city Monday evening, and will remain until Friday. For a wholesome, jolly, good fellow, we don't think the world can beat George.

Mr. D. H. French, formerly of this place, but now of Lagrange, Ky., has been in attendance at court this afternoon of last week. Mr. French expresses himself well pleased with his new home. The many friends of Mrs.
French will be glad to learn that she is improving in health.

We direct your attention to J. W.
Sutton's advertisement, which appears in today's paper. Mr. Sutton represents the Remington Sewing Machine Co., of Ilion, N. Y. He is one of the best sewing machine agents in Ky., and is furnishing machines lower than ever before offered in this county.
Those needing machines should give him a call.

Terrible Storm at Sea.
And there will be a terrible storm around here if those who owe me do not come up and pay me at once. I cannot furnish the sick with medicine free, as I have to pay cash for all drugs. I will be compelled to sue on all my notes and accounts if not paid at once.

Dissolution.
The firm of Phipps & Addington has been dissolved, and all persons indebted to them are requested to settle up without delay. By so doing they will save cost and trouble.

Thou shalt not be a brief hour and all is over, for thou art wanted for other than the ornamental. Thy proud step, and vainly adjusted plumage no more will be the delight and the envy of the barn yard, for a royal feast shall be thine, and thy whole body shall be filled with the dainties of the land, and thou shalt be placed on the table, the admiration of connoisseurs and the center of attraction, and thou shalt tickle the palate of the epicure and fill his stomach with delight, and thy wives and numerous progeny shall mourn thy departure, and the 25th of November shall come to thee no more forever.

Notice.

The firm of Ford & Wells is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All persons indebted to them or having claims against them are earnestly requested to come forward and settle at once, as their business must be settled up as soon as possible. Persons indebted to them will save cost by counseling forward at once and heeding this notice, as they mean business.
Nov. 6, 1875.

Having bought Mr. Wells' interest in the drug business of the firm of Ford & Wells, I will continue the business at the old stand, where will be found constantly on hand all goods usually kept in a first-class drug store, such as pure drugs, medicines, glass, paints, oils, lamps, dye-stuffs, school books, stationery, &c. Pure wines and liquors for medicinal purposes. I am confident that I can offer inducements to the trade, for cash. All orders will be promptly filled. Thanking you for past favors, asking a liberal share of your patronage in future, I remain yours,

J. W. FORD.

To all Whom it may Concern

My Dear Friends,
I have been indulgent for four years—I ask you now to come forward and settle your accounts, I cannot supply medicines for the sick, furnish my family with the necessities of life, and

Last Week the trial of Anthony Mc-Henry (col.) came up, but he confessed judgment, and was sentenced for but one year in the penitentiary. His charge was that of grand larceny.

The Monitor says that hogs are so scarce in that county that a single grunt is worth 10 cents. Well, if the Monitor man is that fond of noise, we would like to supply him with a few thousand cures—all good harkers, and we won't charge him 10 cents, either.

For a Fashionable Suit

Made to order, we cheerfully recommend the Merchant Tailoring establishment of J. Winter & Co., cor.

moderate, always a good fit, and the largest variety to select from.

The Leach woman, who has been confined in the jail at this place for some time, stood her trial last Thursday, and the jury sentenced her to five hours' imprisonment. She used to keep, it is said, a bawdy house near Rockport. There is no mistake about her being a bad woman, and from what we can learn, has been the ruin of two or three young ladies in that vicinity. We think her sentence was a very light one, and don't know but what five years in the penitentiary would have been nearer justice to her.

Conclusions.

J. K. Oglesby, for cutting and wounding his stepson, fined $50.
El. Silcox, horse-stealing, sent to the penitentiary for two years.
John A. McHenry, for stealing a beef, was sent up for one year, and Amos Gunn, same charge, was sent up for two years. Both colored.

Jeff Allen, who broke jail last week, returned and plead guilty to petty larceny, and was sentenced to work on the streets of Hartford for one month.

Stephen Ashby, for giving liquor to a minor, fined $50.

Stephen Ashby and Sam Bell, for hiring a witness to leave court, fined $10 each.

Some time ago we made mention of Amos Gunn, of African descent, killing a beef which did not belong to him.
The killing was done in the woods a short distance below town, and the beef was transferred to his house, where it was found when he was arrested by the town marshal. Gunn was up on trial one day last week. He was found guilty, and his sentence was a term of two years in the penitentiary. It was a clear case of theft, and we regard the sentence as light as he deserves.

The other night a married man chanced to step in the Hartford House while the dancing was going on, and while he was deeply interested in watching the gay ones go tripping across the floor, his wife came down in town in search of him. He was looking over his shoulder at the crowd when his better-half walked up behind him, and as she reached for his collar he yelled out: "Oh! my darling! I forgot the baby had the croup, and was needing the medicine." But as he reached the door she placed a No. 4 against him with the remark, "I reckon you haven't forgot the baby and the croup, now, have you?" And the last account we had from them, the wife was sobbing bitterly to think her husband was so absent-minded.

A Young Man Jailed for Drunken and Disorderly Conduct in the Court House.

It was a sad sight. It occurred in court last week. A young man, befuddled with drink, came into the court room during the sitting of court, and kept disturbing the order and quiet of affairs by his drunken laugh.
The sheriff ordered him to keep quiet, the clerk told him to leave the court house, and his friends tried to prevail on him to behave, but all to no purpose. The Judge bore it as long as he well could, when he committed him to prison for ten hours. Oh, what a sad sight to see! A young man of fine address, bright intellect, and one who might be an ornament to society, marched to jail for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Let this be a lesson to you, young man, that will burn itself into your heart, and resolve you that the demon which has caused you to forsake honor and self respect, and brought disgrace upon you, and unattachable anguish to those who have reared you from infancy, the demon whisky, shall never again pass your lips. Do this, and be a man. All is not lost; it is not too late to reform; but follow this course a little longer, and you may pass the point whence you can retrace your steps. On account of the high esteem we have always entertained for the family, we withhold the name.

The Ohio County Jail.

The work on the new jail is being rapidly pushed forward, and Mr. Bennett, the contractor, thinks the brick work will be completed to-day. A good deal of the iron has already been received—14,000 pounds we believe; which leaves 61,000 pounds yet to come. The iron casing for some of the windows have been set, and the new building begins to present a neat appearance already. The building will be warmed by heated air, and no prisoner will need fire in his room.
The jail will contain eight cells, with two bunks in each cell, which will enable the jailer to comfortably keep sixteen prisoners. These cells will be lined with boiler-iron, and will be sufficiently strong to hold anyone. To say the least of it, Mr. Bennett is a first-class mechanic, and is building a jail which will be an ornament to the town and a credit to the county.

Allen Evades the Jailor, but Re- turns to his Quarters Again.

On Monday night of last week Jeff Allen succeeded in escaping from the jailer of this place, but returned to his quarters the following Wednesday.
He made his escape while carrying a bucket of slop from the debtor's room to the jail garden. As he and the jailer passed out of the house, the candle which the jailer carried was extinguished by a blast of wind, and while Mr. Wise stepped into a room nearby to light it again, Allen made his escape. Wise soon had men on the look-out for him, but their work proved to be of no good, for bright and early Wednesday morning Allen applied at the jail for admission, which was readily granted by Mr. Wise. We learn that Allen did not intend to run away, but thought a stroll into the country would be good for his health. His penalty was a month's labor on the streets.

Another hop came off at the Hartford House last Friday night. The attendance was not so large as at the one the Friday night before, but nevertheless the attendance was large enough to make the occasion a pleasant one. The first set was called by G. B.
Williams, at 7 1/2 o'clock, with eight couples on the floor. The graceful forms of Hartford's fair sex went tripping across the floor in high glee, and were only sorry to hear the announcement of the last set. These are the names of the lady dancers, but being unable to learn their escorts, we will have to omit their names:

Miss Juliett Hardwick, Miss Katie Hardwick, Miss Alice Jarboe, Miss Lou Bennett, Miss Marie Williams, Miss Carrie Rowe, Miss Lizzie Walker, Miss Eva Griffin, Miss Mattie Berry, Miss Alice Leach and Mrs. Mollie Thomas.

There was a good crowd of spectators, as usual, many of whom seemed very desirous of participating.
Yesterday morning we received the surprising announcement of the marriage of our young and gay friend, Mr. E. P. Thomas, to our fair and highly esteemed friend, Miss Carrie Jarboe. We have oftentimes been agreeably surprised, but this intelligence was the greatest of them all. Mr.
Thomas is one of the most promising young men of Hartford, sober, industrious, gentlemanly, in his manner with all, and is a sociable gentleman in conversation, always having a pleasant word for everyone, while the bride is a particular favorite with everyone, and bears acquaintance. She is ladylike in her manners, and wins the love and good wishes of all. They were united in the holy bonds of wedlock at half-past 12 o'clock yesterday, when they took their departure for Owensboro, where they will remain but a short time. Their attendants were Miss Carrie Rowe, of this place, and Mr. Geo. H. Cox, of Owensboro. Mr.
Thomas and bride will return to this place in a short time, where he will conduct her to a cozy little home.
The marriage ceremony was pronounced by Rev. W. W. Cook. We extend to you a hearty welcome, Peter, and hope the lives of you and your better-half may be long ones and of unbounded pleasure.

Sentence of Prisoners.

The present term of the Ohio Circuit Court will be long remembered as a session of general jail delivery. On Friday last the court directed the prisoners who had been found guilty of felony to be brought into court. The jailer soon appeared with George E.
Chinn, John A. McHenry and Ed.
Silcox. Judge Stuart, in a few fly-closen words, sentenced McHenry and Silcox to confinement in the penitentiary, both having plead guilty, the former for one year, and the latter for two years. He addressed the convict, Geo. E. Chinn, as follows: Chinn, you were indicted by the grand jury of Ohio county for the crime of horse-stealing. You waived formal arraignment, and after a long and patient enquiry, the jury returned a verdict of guilty; and it now becomes my duty to ask you if you have anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon you.—Chinn, I have instructed my counsel to apply for a new trial.—The Court:—you would not be heard except upon the question for an arrest of judgment. There being no such question presented, it is the sentence of this court that you be taken to the common jail of the county, and be thence conveyed to the penitentiary of this Commonwealth, there to be confined for a period of four years at hard labor. I have made inquiry, and learn that your family has been of long and reputable standing in the community, and regret exceedingly that you are placed in your present position. I should not have granted a new trial had one been asked. The circumstances which surround your conviction were at least persuasive, and the jury could do no less than have returned the verdict which was returned after a laborious examination, and after an extraordinary able argument of your counsel. Mr. Jailer, you will take charge of the prisoner, and await the appearance of the sheriff with the proper judgment of this court.

LETTER FROM CANEYVILLE.

CANEYVILLE, KY., Nov. 15.

EDITOR HERALD.—Z. F. Carlson, of the firm of Neal & Co., Louisville, was in town Friday on business connected with that house.

The average boy of Caneyville is saving up all his dimes and nickles to lay out in Chinese fire crackers to celebrate the fast approaching Christmas.

The last death that occurred in town was that of Croquet last Monday. The funeral ceremonies were performed in efficient style by our worthy saddler, H. U. Eskridge.

C. F. Kennedy, a young man of this place, went to Leitchfield last Thursday on the 6:30 a. m. train, and returned on the 1:10 p. m. train with Miss Mollie Dennison for his bride.

We spent three weeks on a flowery wedding notice for our Southern Express Agent, J. Rose Bond, expecting him to marry as soon as his new house was complete; but, contrary to our expectations, on its being finished last week, he rented it to our telegraphic operator, M. J. Shaffer. Such is the life of a quill driver.

We are informed Rev. R. G. Gardner, of Hartford, delivered both a private and a public lecture on Masonry at Short creek, seven miles North of this place, last Thursday.

Corn gathering is in order in this vicinity, and the crop is found to be a great deal better than was expected.

form last Thursday, with our hands watching for something to turn up for an item for THE HERALD, our attention was directed to two young men watching the train men unload a car. We caught the following conversation concerning a sorghum evaporator which was in the car: "Sam where do you suppose that billiard table goes to?"

"Don't know, Johnnie, but it's a fine one, indeed." "At this part" of the conversation the conductor gave the door of the car a push, shutting it. Sam was a professor of a school and Johnnie was his pupil, so they both trotted off to the school house no wiser than before.

LETTER FROM KANSAS.

SEDGWICK CITY, KANSAS,
Nov. 22d, 1875.

EDITOR HERALD:—I shall again pen you a few lines concerning southwestern Kansas. The character of this country is a fine rolling prairie—frequently varied by the bottom and valley lands of the creeks and rivers.
The wide bottoms of the Arkansas, and those of the little Arkansas, and the uplands, with their long, generally, all more imperceptible slopes as they sweep down the Doyle, to the branches of the Whitewater and the Cottonwood, to Sand creek, down to the tributaries of the two Arkansas, and down their own rich bottoms. It may well be said, that all these present a most interesting view to the farmer's eye. This beautiful valley, heretofore but little known on account of its great distance from market or commercial thoroughfares, is now, since the railroad was built through it, drawing the attention of the whole country, and its wide bottoms and rich rolling and sloping uplands are proving as productive as they are attractive. The fertility of soil cannot be surpassed, consisting of a large proportion of thoroughly drained valley land, producing beautiful crops of all the grains and fruits of the temperate zone.

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe R. R., is completed to Pueblo, connecting with the Rocky Mountain system of railroads, and, as Kansas is the nearest agricultural State, her products will find a ready and profitable market in the extensive mineral regions developed by the extension of the road.
Coal is found immediately on the line of the road, and the extension to Pueblo, will bring us in communication with the most extensive and valuable coal fields in America.

G. W. BEAUCHAMP.
